TEACHER. Research Series No. 148. Joyce Putnam and G. Gerald Duffy. 34 pp. Using Shavelson and Stern's (1981) models of preactive and interactive decision-making to describe an expert reading teacher's decision-making processes during the course of one academic year, this study revealed that at least some teachers make more interactive decisions than preactive decisions during reading instruction. The study also dramatized the relationship between preactive and interactive teaching, and the relationship between instructional plans and implementation of those plans. Results suggest the Shavelson and Stern models are useful for explaining teacher decision-making and for planning further research.

BEGINNING TEACHERS: How Do They Make Decisions About Reading? Martha Combs. 15 pp. Decision-making processes before and during reading instruction were the focus of this study of 16 first-year elementary school teachers. Major decisions prior to reading instruction centered around placement and grouping, techniques, materials and pacing. Decisions during instruction centered on student motivation rather than alternative effective teaching strategies. Results of the study suggest that teacher educators should help prospective teachers view themselves as decision-makers and should use a planning process that includes alternative teaching strategies.

ED 257 806
THE STRUCTURE OF SCHOOL: Teachers and Authority. Robert E. Feir. 37 pp. This paper presents a sociological view of authority relationships within the school. Teachers claim autonomy, suggests Feir, solely on their ability to make instructional decisions in a single classroom in isolation from colleagues and do not work together to evolve curricular or other school-wide decisions. As a result, the teacher becomes more an alienated worker than an independent professional. Teachers should engage in more job-related discussion and share decisions regarding instructional programs and curricula. To the degree that this participation does not take place, the school is deprived of the collective wisdom of its members, and teachers are deprived of the opportunity to grow professionally.

ERIC, the Educational Resources Information Center, is funded by the Office of Educational Research and Improvement of the U.S. Department of Education. Included in the ERIC system are 16 separate clearinghouses, each responsible for collecting and disseminating information on a specific subject area in education. The ERIC Clearinghouse on Elementary and Early Childhood Education (ERIC/EECE) deals with information relating to the education and development of children from birth through age 12.

ERIC documents are cited and abstracted in the monthly index Resources in Education (RIE). Most ERIC documents may be read on microfiche in many libraries and information centers. In addition, many can be ordered in paper copy and/or microfiche from the ERIC Document Reproduction Service (EDRS), 3900 Wheeler Avenue, Alexandria, VA 22304. For complete information on how to order, contact EDRS or consult the most recent issue of RIE.
